

Today, new technologies are having substantial effects on every sector of day life and economic and social changes must be kept under scrutiny, and so we all need to understand the social implications for daily life and for both employment strategies and other forms of work. The perspective of lifelong learning has become a huge necessity that both older and younger generations will not be allowed to ignore any longer.

In the changing economies of today, it is important that students are strongly involved in acquiring skills needed for both traditional jobs and diverse job profiles. It is important to plan together the activities which will engage our students in the current economic and social situation in Europe and help them build skills and capacity to both create and apply for jobs.
